Le Douanier Rousseau (Henri Rousseau)

(Laval, 1844 – Paris, 1910)

Les galeries marchandes à Paris fleurissant, on créa en 1884, le Salon des Indépendants. Cette exposition sans jury fut organisée pour ceux qui étaient ou se considéraient professionnels - alors très nombreux -, mais qui ne pouvaient satisfaire les critères des salons officiels. C'est lors d'un des Salons des Indépendants qu'Henri Rousseau créa la surprise. Rousseau occupait un poste à l'octroi de Paris, à Vanves. A ses moments libres, il peignait des toiles, tantôt sur la commande de ses voisins, tantôt en guise de paiement pour de la nourriture. Chaque année, de 1886 à sa mort en 1901, il exposa ses toiles au Salon des Indépendants. Là, il se présentait sans savoir-faire professionnel, mais avec le fier sentiment d'être peintre et d'avoir le droit de rivaliser avec n'importe quelle autorité. Rousseau est un des premiers de sa génération à s'être rendu compte de l'arrivée d'une nouvelle époque de liberté dans l'art, y compris celle de pouvoir accéder au rang de peintre, et ce, indépendamment de la manière de peindre et du niveau de formation artistique.

Les œuvres du Douanier Rousseau aidèrent d'autres peintres, peut-être moins talentueux mais tout aussi originaux, à être remarqués et appréciés d'un public qui apprit à voir l'art d'une façon nouvelle. Avec lui, apparaît toute une série de découvertes. Désormais, qu'elles soient naïves ou primitives, les œuvres d'art étaient partout et il y aurait toujours un regard d'artiste pour les révéler.
